Those Who Wore the Gray Now Show as Great Reverence for the Stars and Stripes as They Do for the Stars and Bars, as Shown by Recent Reunion.

SUGGEST YANK AND REB MEET

Throughout the week St. Linus has been entertaining a lot of lame and crippled old gentlemen, who, though infirm and crutch and cane bearers, seemed proud of their infirmities and their crutches. They were the veterans of the war of 1851-65 on the Confederate side.

They were in St. Louis for Confederate Veterans' Day at the World's Pair, last Monday and many of them remained over with members of their families or with St. Louis friends to see the Fair. They were the center of attention-reverential attention of the kind that is paid to men who have done their duty as they saw it and who have fought and suffered for principle as the men of no nation ever fought before

A handsome young woman, bright of eye, buoyant of disposition, stood in the Missouri building Monday afternoon beside a grizzled gentleman whose appearance indicated that his age was not far from the 70 mark. His right leg to the knee was missing; he was feeble. "Let me present you," she sald to a St keep marching on toward the dead line. We are not quite so young as we used to be, but our hearts are ever young. We forget all about the hardships and the trials we passed through, and only remember the brightness and the bapp ness which was ours. We never refer to the hardships we endured, except in a jocular way. The harshness and the sting has worn off and we can laugh at them now."

"It is true the runks are thinning out, but as long as there are ten left, and they are able to get to a central point there will be rounions, reunions for the sake of the patriotic sentiment and feeling of comradeship that binds old soldiers together, a feeling that cannot be expressed and cannot be understood save by a soldier." said John Allison of Nashville. Tenn. "I hope that before this World's Fair is over there will be another Veterans' Day, but I want it a little different from this. I don't want a Confederate Veterans Day or a Union Veterans Day, but a day for the veterans of the Civil War. I want to see both sides meet here, and walk hand in hand over this great Exposition, this aggregation of the wisdom and the science and the power of many nations. I want to show the whole world that there is no North nor South, no East nor West, but that we are one great, grand and glorious nation.

"Such a day as this would not be establishing a precedent. That was done when General John C. Hates and General Joe Wheeler marched to the front arm in arm during the Spanish-American War, and one loved the Stars and Stripes as dearly as the other. At the time they went to the front in the Spanish-American War, and one loved the Stars and Stripes as dearly as the other. At the time they went to the front in the Spanish-American War, and one loved the Stars and Stripes as dearly as the other.

A CIVIL WAR VETERANS DAY. "A Civil War Veterans" Day would fill the Fair grounds as they never have been filled, and as they never will be. It would me of the greatest days in the history be one of the greatest days it the history of the country. The only feeling that exists between the North and the South is one of respect and love, and it is as it should be. Here is my friend John Brown of Knoxville. He and I fought against each other on a dozen battlefields, yet there is not a man whom I admire more than I do him, and if there was need of it he and I would shoulder arms and defend our country, his and mine, nor more his because he fought in the ranks of the blue, while I fought in the ranks of the gray. He does not love his country more than I do. He stood for what was right as he saw it, I for right as it looked to me."

Dector Woods jumped from the automobile when the horse crashed into it, but Doctor Lewis could not do so, and sustained several injuries. A compound fracture of the leg was inflicted by the first leap, and the animal struck him several violent blows about the body before its feet were gotten out of the machine. Frantic efforts were made by Doctor Wood to save his friend, and for a moment it looked as if Doctor Lewis would be killed, but the driver of the horse finally succeeded in his endeavors to extricate the animal from the horseless carriage. The crossing was crowded with vehicles, and there was much confusion for a short while. The driver of the team was not blamed for the accident Doctor Lewis was taken to his home in an ambulance. The automobile was partially wrecked, the tonneau being almost torn away.
